e. Cookies

Definitions, characteristics and application of the regulation

Cookies are small text files that websites visited by the user send and record on the computer or mobile device of the same. They are then transmitted back to the relative sites during the next visit. Thanks to cookies the site remembers the actions and preferences of the user (such as, for example, login data, default language, font sizes, additional display settings, etc.) so that the user does not need to specify them again when they re-visit the site and browses its pages. Cookies are therefore used to perform computer authentication, session monitoring and to store information about the activities of users who access a website and may also contain a unique identifier that allows for the monitoring of user experiences on the site for statistical or advertising purposes.

During the navigation of a site, the user may also receive cookies on their computer or mobile device from sites or web servers other than the one they are visiting (so-called "third party" cookies). Some operations cannot be performed without the use of cookies, which in some cases are technically necessary for the operation of the Website.

There are various types of cookies and depending on their features and functions, they may remain on the computer or mobile device of the user for different periods of time: so-called session cookies, which are automatically deleted when you close your browser; so-called persistent cookies, which remain on the user's device until a pre-established date.

According to applicable legislation, your prior explicit consent for the use of cookies is not always required. In particular, such consent is not required for "technical cookies", for example, those used for the sole purpose of transmitting a communication over an electronic communications network, or as strictly necessary to provide you with a service that has been explicitly requested by the user. In other words, technical cookies are indispensable for the operation of the site or to perform tasks requested by the user.

Types of cookies used by the Website

The Website uses first party cookies:

- Technical cookies – session or navigation – are strictly necessary for the operation of the Website or to allow users to make use of the content and services they have requested.
- Analytics cookies allow for an understanding of how the Website is used. These cookies do not collect information about the identity of the user or any Personal Data. The data is processed in an aggregate and anonymous form.
- Functional cookies are used to activate specific functionalities of the Website and a number of selected criteria (for example, the language, the products selected for purchase) in order to improve the service provided.

BitBang also uses third-party cookies – i.e., cookies from websites / web servers other than the Website, and which are used for specific purposes of the third parties owning those websites / webservers. These third parties will typically be considered independent data controllers regarding their cookies, and therefore you must refer to their privacy policies, information notices or other materials to obtain more information on them, as specified below:
